LADIES NIGHT TAKES ON A NEW MEANING

When one hears the phrase “Ladies Night,” the thought of women enjoying drinks with some of her friends comes to mind, but at Quality Tech Services in Edina the phrase takes on a whole new meaning.

Quarterly the women who work for Quality Tech Services, a medical device packaging company, get together for a night of giving back to the community through volunteering. This month Ladies Night will be held at the volunteer organization, Feed My Starving Children Sept. 27 at 5:30 p.m.

Ladies Night—2

According to a study for the nonprofit organization, Womens Way, women who volunteer improve their leadership, communication and problem solving skills.

“I believe this creates a sense of work-life balance among the women that work at QTS,” said Nicole Dodge, Human Resources Director. “Giving back to the community is something QTS takes pride in and also builds camaraderie among our employees,” she said.

Instead of snacking on hors d’oeuvres and sipping on drinks the ladies will spend the evening packing nutritious meals for starving children throughout the world. The meals, which are made up of rice, soy, vitamins and dehydrated vegetables are distributed to starving children worldwide.

FMSC is a nonprofit organization that partners with relief organizations worldwide to distribute meals to starving children in relief areas.

Last year FMSC volunteers packaged 30 million life-sustaining meals that were distributed in 45 countries.

Established in 2001, QTS provides medical device companies with clean room assembly and other various packaging solutions through package: validations, assembly, manufacturing, labeling and design. The company currently employs 65 people in Edina.
